

THE POCHE DAILY RECORD

LOVE'S SACRIFICE.—Charles Hulse, of Jeffersonville, died in New Albany, on Sunday morning of constant small-pox, after an illness of eleven days. Every effort was used to save the life of the young man, but without success. The circumstances attending the sickness and death of this promising young gentleman are at once sad and romantic. He was engaged to be wedded to Miss. Mollie Miller, a young lady living in New Albany, the marriage being fixed for some time during the holiday season. Three weeks ago Miss Miller was taken ill with the small-pox, and a congestive chill setting in with the disease, she died. During her sickness, notwithstanding its contagious character, Hulse was constant in his attendance at her bedside, caring tenderly for his betrothed, and nursing her with a devoted and unselfish spirit that is as rare as it is honorable in this selfish and unromantic age. His devotion produced the result which he could not but have anticipated, but which he braved for the sweet privilege of soothing the dying hours of his affianced wife. A short week after Miss Miller's death Hulse was prostrated with the same disease that had carried off the object of his affections, having contracted it while in attendance upon her.

His grief at the loss of his betrothed had rendered him perfectly indifferent to the result; and indeed he made up his mind to die from the beginning of his illness, telling several of his friends and writing to his relatives, that he would not and did not care to recover, and begging them not to jeopardize their lives by coming to see him. The last two days of his illness his life hung, as it were, upon a thread, and only a few hopeful friends thought that he would recover. His anticipations were realized, and on Sunday morning he breathed his last, a self-devoted sacrifice to love.—Louisville Courier.
